(c) There is no proposal on hand for utilizing this water for irrigation by constructing a bed dam near Kurangani. A proposal to construct an anicut across the Tambaraparani river at Mukkanni 12 miles downstream of Srivaikuntam anicut to irrigate about 6,000 acres, was examined and dropped in view of the fact that the surplus available was found to be neither steady nor dependable for direct irrigation. Besides, the Manimuthar Project was then under construction and two other reservoirs (Servalar and Gatana) were under contemplation in the higher reaches of Tambaraparani. The scope for constructing storage work lower down is also limited. Any scheme for utilizing the surplus waters of Srivaikuntam anicut can be considered only after watching the working of the Manimuthar Reservoir and other proposed reservoirs.

A proposal to divert the surplus waters at Srivaikuntam anicut into the Kudiraimozhitheri was examined but found not feasible as the then level was found to be too high and there was no command for the Srivaikuntam anicut. Feasibility of diverting the waters from above Marudur anicut was also examined. As it involved excavation of a new channel from Marudur anicut for a length of 21 miles at a cost of about Rs. 1·8 crores and as it was found that the water so drawn would soak only the bottom-most point of Kudiraimozhitheri the scheme was considered impracticable.
